"You must remember," said Mr. Roy,
"that Governor Edwards was first appointed to office by Woodrow Wilson up the financial system of the state."

"Is there any possibility of President Wilson's indorsing Governor Edwards's candidacy?" he was asked.

McAdoo Still Probable Nominee

McAdoo Still Probable Nominee

The process of elimination continues to leave William G. McAdoo as apparently the most likely nominee, despite his declaration that he is not a candidate. There is the ever-lurking fear that President Wilson may decide he wants the nomination himself, which has been considerably intensified by "The World" interview with the President, telling of his greatly improved physical condition, but containing not a word which would prevent the President seeking a third term. But this possibility of the President being the nominee is so distressing to most of the Democratic leaders here that few can be forced to admit, even privately, that it is a possibility.

The Tribune correspondent has actually not found a single Democrat of real prominence who will admit, there is any chance of the President being named. Yet the fear of the thing is obvious on every hand, even to those who think if Mr. Wilson should desire the nomination he could not muster the two-thirds majority necessary for momination.

"Birds of a Feather Flock Together"

Years ago the New York Sun spoke of a certain play as "the kind of a play that will be enjoyed by the kind of people who enjoy this kind of a play."

It is possible to judge hundreds of thousands of people in a rough, approximate way by studying the publications they elect to buy and read.

This is more often true in the choice of national periodicals, because in many cities a newspaper must be taken without a range of selection.

For the purpose of commercial generalization, a study of a magazine itself is the best way of picturing the composite reader.

The familiar exception of the college professor who finds mental relaxation in the shilling shocker or the anaemic bookkeeper who feeds on virile tales of men inevitably described as "red-blooded" upsets a nicety of application as an invariable rule.

However, no questionnaire or other method of investigation of a circulation leads to as safe a generalization as may be made after a study of the magazine itself.

Claims Strength in East

"Governor Edwards is the only candidate who can go to the East and carry any of the states named. He proved his strength in New Jersey last year, when he overturned a Republican majority of 75,000 and carried the state by a majority of 15,000.

"He can win New York on his liberal platform and he can do the same throughout the New England States.

"We maintain that Governor Edwards will get more Republican votes than any other candidate that could be nominated by the Democratic party. We are certain of this because the poll taken by "The Literary Digest" showed that Governor Edwards received 13,853 Republican votes, or more than all the other Democratic candidates combined. "Governor Edwards is the only man whom the Democrats can nominate who will win in November."
